

Storm Damage Secrets: How to Avoid Getting Screwed by a Roof Salesman

Hail and Wind storms are most common in the Midwest, but in recent years they have been more frequent, and they are happening all over the country. You have seen it on the news! More and more people are getting scammed, ripped off, stolen from, and in some cases losing their homes and savings because of unscrupulous gypsies and con artists posing as contractors. Unfortunately there isnt much the authorities can do once these thieves have skipped town, after wrecking homeowners lives, and the normally publicized tips you see on the news and internet are nowhere near good enough. The best way to avoid getting screwed by a dishonest contractor is to be proactive in the beginning, but how? This book has detailed tools and steps to protect you, your family, and your home; and an abundance of new material from inside the construction industry, and not yet shared in previous books from the Storm Damage Secrets series. This book has a cynical tone throughout to accentuate the gravity of the decision you will have to make in choosing a contractor to work on your home, yet it is mixed with positive ways to wade through the chaos. I use examples from all over the U.S., but mostly Oklahoma and Texas. These two states consistently have more hail and wind storms than anywhere else, yet have the loosest consumer protection laws and regulations when it comes to the roofing industry. A large number of storm chasing contractors will come from these states when hail and tornadoes hit your area. The principles found here are useful no matter what state you live in and can even be applied to other tradesman such as plumbers, electricians, window salesman, solar panelists, etc.
